Dear Parents,

As Indiana boys and girls go back to their classrooms this autumn, nothing is more certain about the future than uncertainty itself.

Our role as a parent, as a grandparent or some other part of a child's family, remains as always: to prepare them for a successful future, whatever it may bring.

To reduce uncertainty and insure the future as best our nation can, President George Bush has taken the lead in establishing six national goals for education to be achieved by the turn of the century, by the Year 2000. To talk about those goals and the president's plan to create "AMERICA 2000 Communities," Indiana Kiwanis Clubs and high school students across our state are setting up "town meetings" for individuals in the public to join in this effort and to express their viewpoints.

Our job as the Back-To-School season arrives is to send our boys and girls off to school with love and concern -- along with a check to cover book rental and cafeteria lunches. These boys and girls have a job, too: to learn. We hope they develop a love for learning, because the uncertainties of tomorrow mean they are likely to spend their lifetimes in learning ... learning new skills, learning new ways to live, learning new customs among the world's peoples as we are all drawn closer by technology on a "shrinking" planet.

Uncertainty about tomorrow is underscored right now by rapid changes in the Soviet Union. This uncertainty reminds us that no one can predict what knowledge will be required of an individual to be prepared for every human endeavor, to earn a living or to enhance the progress of the human race. At the same time, new challenges emerge for the next generation to devise and develop a new social, political, and economic fabric to unite its world.

What it means today for our boys and girls returning to school is a national need for a commitment to learning. The very best reason for this commitment is that our boys and girls deserve a quality young adult life that can in large measure be attained through a quality education.

Whatever the future holds -- whether it is a job and earning a living, or whether it is teaching and helping, or whether it is some other means to help guide and accomplish human progress -- the fact is that the next generation of Indiana's leadership is in school today. Today's first graders will enter high school in 1999 as the Class of '03.

Today's nationwide efforts to improve schools are for the benefit of members of this generation, and their offspring. It's for the future of these United States. That's why concerned Kiwanis Club members across the state are asking high school students to lead town meetings on the National Education Goals. These are the national six goals, each to be achieved by the Year 2000:

1. All children in America will start school ready to learn. That means they will be in good health, having been read to, and otherwise prepared by their families. It means access to preschool for all disadvantaged and disabled children.

2. The high school graduation rate will increase to at least 90 percent. Indiana's 1989-90 rate was 78 percent and the national average is 74 percent.

3. American students will leave Grades 4, 8, and 12 having demonstrated competency in challenging subject matter -- including English, mathematics, science, history, and geography; and every school in America will insure that all students learn to use their minds well, so that they may be prepared for responsible citizenship, further learning, and productive employment in a modern economy.

4. American students will be first in the world in mathematics and science achievement. That will include emphasis in early grades and in college programs for women and minority students.

5. Every adult American will be literate and will possess the knowledge and skills necessary to compete in a global economy and exercise the rights and responsibilities of citizenship.

6. Every school in America will be free of drugs and violence and will offer a disciplined environment conducive to learning.

The goals are ambitious. To reach them, the president's strategy is called AMERICA 2000. To "make this land all that it should be," he asks communities across the U.S. to take part in creating a New Generation of American Schools for tomorrow's students and transforming America into a nation of students. We think public participants in the student-led town meetings will want to form AMERICA 2000 communities. They can be called INDIANA 2000 communities, too.

The national goals and a strong showing of community support for education go a long way toward providing stability against the effects of uncertainty. We need to express our views on schooling with the same caring and concern with which we build a child's self-esteem -- with love and a frequent hug.

With another autumn announcing the new school year's arrival, all of us must focus on the importance of improving our schools at the same time we impress boys and girls with the importance of a sound educational foundation.

Sincerely,

H. Dean Evans
Superintendent of Public Instruction

Professionals, educators, and parents are invited to this state-wide conference on Preschool Education for Deaf and Hard of Hearing children in conjunction with the Indiana Department of Education Division of Special Education to provide essential information and training on how to establish an ideal preschool education for deaf children in local school settings in the State of Indiana. This is to assist the local school districts to develop the most appropriate educational program for 3 to 5 year old deaf and hard of hearing youngsters in the least restrictive environment for parents and their children. The Public Law 99-457 has mandated local school districts develop such programs to serve those children within the districts.

Since the summer of 1991 and the beginning of the new school year, the Indiana School for the Deaf has received numerous requests to help teachers and staff establish preschool programs for deaf children in their local school districts. Due to limited staff and resources, ISD is offering this special conference to all those interested in learning about ISD's successful preschool program.
